Fish Factor

By Laine Welch

“Unprecedented” is how fishery managers are describing sockeye catches at Bristol Bay, which topped one million fish for seven days straight at the Nushagak district last week and neared the two million mark on several days. By July 9, Alaska’s statewide sockeye salmon catch was approaching 32 million, of which more than 25 million came from Bristol Bay. The only other region getting good sockeye catches was the Alaska Peninsula where nearly 4.6 million reds were landed so far.

The Alaska Peninsula also was far ahead of all other regions for pink salmon catches with over 3.3 million taken out of a total statewide tally of just over 5.4 million so far.

Pink salmon run in distinct two-year cycles with odd years being stronger, and the preseason forecast calls for a total Alaska harvest of 124.2 million pinks this summer.

The timing for peak pink harvests is still several weeks away; likewise for chums, and most cohos will arrive in mid-August.

Alaska salmon managers are projecting the 2021 statewide salmon catch to top 190 million fish, a 61 percent increase over last year’s take of about 118 million salmon. By July 9, the statewide catch for all species had topped 41 million fish.

There’s still lots of fishing left to go and so far, the most sluggish catches were coming out of Southeast where only 258,000 salmon were landed by last week.

On the Yukon River, summer chum salmon returns are the lowest on record and state managers will request a disaster declaration for the second year in a row.

Norton Sound primes for pinks

Chums also are a bust at Norton Sound where the runs have dropped to less than 5 percent of what is typical each summer.

“Right now, we don’t see any chum salmon openings. Something happened in the ocean that really knocked them down for this stretch,” said Jim Menard, regional manager for the Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game in Nome.

Menard told KNOM that low chum runs have been occurring

Draft Programmatic Environmental Impact Statement (PEIS) for Surveying and Mapping Projects in U.S. Waters for Coastal and Marine Data Acquisition Available for Public Comment

NOS has prepared a Draft PEIS in accordance with the National Environmental Policy Act to analyze the potential environmental impacts associated with NOS’s recurring data collection projects to characterize submerged features (e.g., habitat, bathymetry, marine debris). The Draft PEIS is now available for public review and comment.

The “action area” for these projects encompasses United States (U.S.) rivers, states’ offshore waters, the U.S. territorial sea, the contiguous zone, the U.S. Exclusive Economic Zone (U.S. EEZ), and coastal and riparian lands. As a part of the Proposed Action, NOS may use active acoustic equipment such as sub-bottom profilers, single beam and multibeam echo sounders, side-scan sonars, and Acoustic Doppler Current Profilers. The Draft PEIS analyzes NOS data collection projects for a time period of 6 years. Publication of the Draft PEIS on June 25, 2021 begins the 60-day public comment period.

The Draft PEIS, fact sheets, and a summary of impacts can be accessed online at: <https://oceanservice.noaa.gov/about/environmental-compliance/surveying-mapping.html>.

Written comments on the Draft PEIS will be accepted on or before August 24, 2021 and may be submitted by one of the following methods:
