212th Rescue Squadron pararescuemen onboard.

The HC-130 provided weather reconnaissance and air-to-air refueled the HH-60 three times to extend its range for the more than 1,000-mile round trip.

Once the helicopter crew located the boat, the Pave Hawk special mission aviator hoisted two pararescuemen to make contact with the boaters before hoisting them into the helicopter.

The Pave Hawk crew flew the boaters to Deering where they were released to the community's search and rescue president.

Alaska Air National Guard Lt.

Col. Allan Sain, AKRCC director, credited the boaters with having long-range communications.

"We always advise people going into the outdoors to have two-way satellite communications devices because cellphone coverage is spotty in the state," Sain said. "But long-range radio is still an effective way to communicate in Alaska when you need help."
